Lead and Zinc: End Use Industry Statistical Supplement 2012-2021

2023 Edition

Developments in industries including the automotive, battery, steel, construction as well as the household appliance sector have a significant impact on the demand for lead and zinc. To reflect this the International Lead and Zinc Study Group has produced a detailed report on trends in these end-use markets as a supplement to its regular statistical output. Producers and analysts will be able to use this report to compare trends in lead and zinc usage with those in the main lead and zinc end use industries. The report also helps to identify sectors and regions with the greatest potential for lead and zinc demand growth.

The available data covering the ten-year period 2012-2021 is clearly presented in a total of 24 tables with graphical representations highlighting selected features provided throughout the report.

The publication covers the world automotive industry and includes comprehensive details on vehicles produced, registered and in use for both the car and commercial vehicle sectors as well as battery shipments in the US and Japanese markets. Information is presented on the global trade of lead-acid batteries used for starting piston engines (SLI batteries), the galvanizing of steel sheet worldwide, general galvanizing in Europe, the production of home appliances in China and building permits in Europe. Data on brass production in major markets is also listed.

Economic and social statistics including national population levels are provided for comparative purposes as well as annual GDP growth by country and industrial production indices for both total and manufacturing industries. Details of historic oil price levels are also included.
